

Fire drill procedures are to be posted in all rooms. The path to be followed is to be clearly marked. Discuss an alternate route should the primary path become blocked. It is important that all students be informed early in the year concerning the fire regulations. Instruct your classes during the first week of school concerning fire drills.

Fire drills should aim at a quick dismissal. Students should not carry coats, books, and other possessions with them. At the sound of the fire signal, all work must cease instantly. An announcement will be made, via the school intercom system, stating the school will be participating in a school fire drill before the alarm sounds. Students will pass quickly from the room as directed by the teacher. They are not to run or push. Teachers should take class attendance (grade book) with them and check attendance after regrouping outside the building (approximately 200 feet). This attendance should be handed to the nearest administration personnel or handed to the office. A teacher should leave the building only after the last student in his/her group.

Students in Life Skills should be taught to watch electric irons for overheating, and take some time to teach the students correct habits of lighting stoves. In science labs, electric circuits for experimentation should be checked carefully before turning on the current.
